How Ranked Choice Voting Works

- There were 84 voters in this contest, so the number of votes needed to win a majority is 43.
- A "round" is the process of determining if there's a ranked-choice winner, and, if not, eliminating the lowest vote getters.
- In Round 1, all first-choice votes are added up. If no option gets a majority in Round 1, then the lowest vote getter is eliminated.
- Anyone who voted for the eliminated option has their vote count for their next ranked choice in the following round.
- This continues for as many rounds as are needed to determine a winner.
- When all of the options a voter has ranked have been eliminated, the vote is considered "exhausted." In other words, there is no "next ranked choice" to move the vote to.
